Description	Public health being a democratic enterprise that aims to improve health for all, this should be reflected in all stages of the planning process: from population need assessment to evaluation of the program or policy. As opposed to interventions restricted to the clinical setting, primary disease prevention and health promotion programs are targeting broad and open systems of actors that leave little control over the implementation processes and over the conditions under which efforts are carried out. In this module, students will therefore be introduced to the knowledge and skills of real-life public health program and policy planning. Although, the approaches covered will be first assessed according to their potential impact on health and well-being, equity and participation of the population will be the two core dimensions guiding their appraisal.

Valuing diversity	Diversity enriches learning. It requires an atmosphere of inclusion and tolerance, which oftentimes challenges our own closely-held ideas, as well as our personal comfort zones. The results, however, create a sense of community and promote excellence in the learning environment. This class will follow principles of inclusion, respect, tolerance, and acceptance that support the values of diversity. Diversity includes consideration of: (1) life experiences, including type, variety, uniqueness, duration, personal values, political viewpoints, and intensity; and (2) factors related to "diversity of presence," including, among others, age, economic circumstances, ethnic identification, family educational attainment, disability, gender, geographic origin, maturity, race, religion, sexual orientation and social position.
Course evaluation	EHESP requests that you complete a course evaluation at the end of the school year. Your responses will be anonymous, with feedback provided in the aggregate. Open-ended comments will be shared with instructors, but not identified with individual students. Your participation in course evaluation is an expectation, since providing constructive feedback is a professional obligation. Feedback is critical, moreover, to improving the quality of our courses, as well as for instructor assessment.
